Appreciating Suggestions

People will always have an idea about how you should live your life, but your idea is the only one that matters. As children, our parents had dreams for us. They wanted us to do well in school, and to do whatever was necessary to reach our highest potential. Later in life, friends may try to set us up with their idea of the perfect partner or the perfect job. Spouses may have agendas for us, too. People close to us may have ideas about how we should live our lives, ideas that usually come from love and the desire for us to be happy. Other times, they come from a place of need within them—whether it is the parent who wants us to live out his or her dreams or the friend or spouse who wants us to play an already-defined role. Whatever the case, we can appreciate and consider those people’s input, but ultimately we must follow our own inner guidance.

There may come a time when all the suggestions can become overbearing. We may feel that the people we love don’t approve of our judgment, which can hurt our feelings. It can interfere with the choices we make for our lives by making us doubt ourselves, or filling a void with their wishes before we’ve had a chance to decide what we want. It can affect us energetically as well. We may have to deal with feelings of resistance or the need to shut ourselves off from them. But we can take some time to rid ourselves of any unnecessary doubts and go within to become clear on what we desire for ourselves.

We can tell our loved ones how much we appreciate their thoughts and ideas, but that we need to live our own lives and make our own decisions. We can explain that they need to let us learn from our own experiences rather than rob us of wonderful life lessons and the opportunity to fine-tune our own judgment. When they see that we are happy with our lives and the path we are taking to reach our goals, they can rest assured that all we need them to do is to share in our joy.

"For My First Sound Movie, I Filmed a $5,000 Epic."

Sanyo made it easy.

Jersey's wedding. The most important day in my sister's life. The most expensive in Dad's. So I thought a Sanyo sound movie camera. It made sure we'd remember every minute (and every dollar). I'd expected a really sound movie camera to be expensive and complicated. I was wrong. My Sanyo cost much less than the flowers for the wedding. And it was a cinch to learn how to use it!

All I did was pop in a Kodak® sound film cartridge. Plug in the mike. Aim and shoot. The entire day turned out beautifully. I zoomed in to catch the happy couple up close. The microphone even caught the slight wobble in Jersey's voice when she said "I do."

After the ceremony I got a short, clear record of the toasts and dancing at the reception, even by candlelight.

The Sanyo sound movie camera took care of all the adjusting by itself. Automatically. So I didn't have to worry. By just looking in the viewfinder, I could tell that the picture was perfectly focused, the film was running properly, the sound was correct, and the exposure was right-on. By using the optional remote control feature, I was even able to film myself congratulating the groom. Sanyo made it impossible for me to goof.

Thanks to Sanyo's simplicity, Jersey's Wedding is the most beautiful movie we've ever seen. And every time Dad sees it, he feels a little better about the $5000.

Chicken Bacon Ranch Potato Bake

a saucy, delicious dish that is made of soft potatoes, juicy chicken, crispy bacon, and best of all? It's all made in ONE DISH. It's a perfect, easy meal!

What's needed for this one pan dish:

The most excellent thing about this Chicken Bacon Potato recipe is that it has everything that comfort food lovers fantasize about.

- Chicken: You want leftover or rotisserie chicken. As long as it's cooked, you're good to go!
- Potatoes: I used Russets because I like the starch factor with these ones. But use what you have on hand.
- Bacon: A nice smoked bacon is perfect. I wouldn't use a maple-flavored, as it might clash with the other flavors. You also want it cooked to your texture preference.
- Ranch Dressing: Use the regular Ranch Salad Dressing. The liquid kind, not the powdered packets.
- Sour cream: Just plain old sour cream.
- Onion
- Cheddar (or your favorite cheese): I think cheddar goes the best with these ingredients, but you do what you like best. If you love a different cheese that melts really nicely, use that one!
- Seasonings

How Do I Make This Chicken Ranch Dish? Just start by washing the potatoes, dry them slightly, and dice them up. No need for peeling or perfectionism. Throw them in a bowl.

Add the rest of the ingredients, reserving some of the cheese and bacon for garnish at the end. Put it in the oven, cover it, and bake! You'll be able to tell when things are ready – try piercing a chunk of potato with a fork. If it is soft, you're ready to serve!

If you end up with leftovers from this Chicken Bacon Ranch Potato Bake, storing it is simple. It will stay in the refrigerator for up to 4 days, covered in an air-tight container.
