Eric Dane's 'Famous Last Words' on Netflix offers an engaging mix of reflection and insight from an actor best known for his roles in Grey's Anatomy and Euphoria.

He speaks with a grounded and sincere voice, taking readers through moments from his life and career without feeling distant or overly polished.

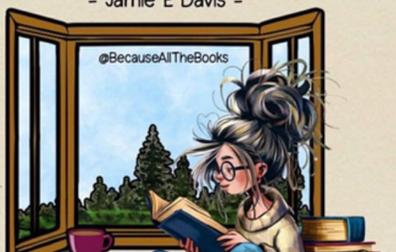

He may be most famously known for his role as Dr. Mark Sloan on Grey's Anatomy, a role that made him a household name, as well as his more recent work in Euphoria and other projects. What stands out is his honesty about both the highs and the challenges of working in the spotlight.

Whether you are familiar with his acting or simply curious about the experiences that shaped him, this memoir feels personal and relatable. It is a thoughtful sit down for fans with depth and heart.

Eric Dane, the American actor known as "McSteamy" Sloan on Grey's Anatomy (and later as Cal Jacobs on Euphoria), died on February 19, 2026 at the age of 53 after a battle with a myotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS). He had publicly announced his ALS diagnosis in April 2025 and spent his final months surrounded by loved ones while also raising awareness about the disease. He will be missed.

A weasel walks into a bar.

The bartender looks up and says "Wow! In all my years tending bar, I've never had a weasel stop by. What can I get you?"

"Pop," goes the weasel.

Accepting Compliments - Many of us find it difficult to accept compliments but easily believe the slightest criticism. Today, right now, let's make a choice to fully accept compliments as we would a gift. Sincere compliments are gifts of praise. They are kudos given for wise choices or accomplishments or perhaps for letting your light shine. There is no reason not to accept the gift of a kind word, but some of us argue against them, even giving reasons why they aren't true.

If we visualize the energy of a compliment, we would see beautiful, shining, positive energy being sent from the giver. That energy, if accepted graciously, will brighten our personal energy field. Our gratitude then returns to the giver as warm, fuzzy, glowing energy, completing an even circuit of good feelings. But if we reject a compliment, what could have been a beautiful exchange becomes awkward and uncomfortable, making it a negative experience instead. Misplaced modesty can ruin the joy of sharing this connection with another person.

We can accept a compliment and still be modest by simply saying "thank you." However, if compliments are rejected due to a lack of self-esteem, then the first step is to start believing good things about yourself. Try giving yourself compliments in the mirror. Beyond the initial feelings of silliness, you will notice how good it feels. Watch the smile it puts on your face. The next step would be to see how it feels to give compliments to others. Notice how great you feel when you've made another person's face brighten and how differently you feel when the gift you've offered is rejected. Having experienced all sides, you will be ready to play along fully and willingly.

We are our harshest critics. When we accept compliments, we are reminded that others see us through different eyes. All living beings crave positive attention, and we all deserve to have positive energy shared with us. Perhaps if we happily and gratefully accept compliments, we will give others permission to do so as well.

Let's talk about being tired. Not sleepy tired. Soul tired. The kind where you are still functioning, still showing up, still getting things done... but something in you feels more than stretched thin.

Here is the truth nobody says out loud. You are allowed to be exhausted by things you are strong enough to handle.

Strength does not cancel fatigue.

You can be capable and still need a break. You can be resilient and still want a minute to not be the strong one. Rest is not quitting. Pausing is not failing. Stepping back is not weakness.

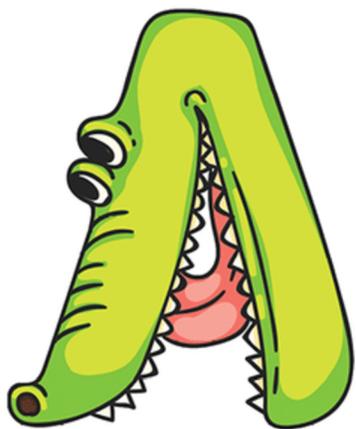

Sometimes the bravest thing you can do is admit you are tired and give yourself permission to recharge. The world will keep spinning. Take the breath anyway. — Ruby
