Your Natural Beauty - In a world of constant advertisements promoting youthfulness and external beauty standards, natural beauty and aging gracefully often takes a back seat.

This leaves many of us feeling overwhelmed, disconnected, or unhappy. But there is a profound spiritual energy that comes with embracing and celebrating who we are authentically — at whatever age we are.

Natural beauty doesn't necessarily mean to "let it all go" or to put aside the work you do to look and feel your best. Rather, taking care of our bodies supports our health and allows us to do things we love — which energizes and inspires us.

It's important to balance the doing and the being, remembering that outward beauty is a reflection of our inward beauty — the more we've awakened within and are living fully, the more our bodies can radiate that conscious energy and well-being.

Taking care of ourselves holistically by nourishing our bodies with whole, nutrient-rich foods, staying hydrated, getting regular exercise, and prioritizing self-care rituals all play a significant role in supporting our vitality. Staying in tune to how our bodies change over time, we can choose foods that make sense for the life phase we are in. And we can choose activities that keep us feeling strong and vibrant, whether that be stretching, yoga, dance, or any movement we enjoy.

Every chapter in life is an opportunity. Seize this moment by reflecting on what your present needs are to feel your most radiant self, inside and out.

Stop Saving Everything for Someday

That word - someday. Someday I'll take that trip. Someday I'll wear that beautiful dress. Someday I'll use the fancy dishes.

Someday I'll tell someone how much they mean to me.

I've got news for you. Someday isn't a day on the calendar. We've become a society of people saving our best things for occasions that may never arrive.

We've got candles we're afraid to burn, clothes we're afraid to wear, and dreams we're afraid to chase.

We've got good china collecting dust while we eat supper off chipped plates in front of the television.

And for WHAT?

Are we expecting the Queen to drop by for meatloaf?

Life doesn't send out invitations announcing when the special moments are coming. Sometimes the special occasion is simply waking up on a Tuesday morning with someone you love still sleeping beside you.

We spend so much of our lives waiting - until we have more money, until we lose weight, until the kids grow up or until retirement.

Meanwhile, life is happening. Right now. In all its messy, imperfect, beautiful glory.

And here's the uncomfortable truth: not everybody gets a someday.

So dance in the kitchen, eat dessert first once in a while and call the person you've been meaning to call.

Don't save your kind words for a funeral when the person who needed to hear them isn't around to listen.

Memories? Those are worth making. Stop saving your best things, your best words, and your best life for a day that doesn't exist.

Today is a special occasion. Act like it.

Until next time, Love, Ruby ❤️
