The Passenger

Simply going through the motions of life puts us directly in the passenger seat, when we should really be in the driver's seat.

It's easy to go through this fast-paced world feeling as if you are being dragged through your days on the back of a wild horse. Many of us go from one thing to another until we end up back at home in the evening with just enough time to wind down and go to sleep, waking up the next morning to begin the wild ride once more. While this can be exhilarating for certain periods of time, a life lived entirely in this fashion can be exhausting, and more importantly, it places us in the passenger's seat when we are the ones who should be driving.

When we get caught up in our packed schedule and our many obligations, weeks can go by without us doing one spontaneous thing or taking time to look at the bigger picture. Without these breaks, we run the risk of going through our precious days on a runaway train. Taking time to view the bigger picture, asking ourselves if we are happy with the course we are on and making adjustments puts us back in the driver's seat where we belong. When we take responsibility for charting our own course, we may well go in an entirely different direction from the one laid out for us by society and familial expectations. This can be uncomfortable in the short term, but in the long term it is much worse to live this precious life without ever taking the wheel and navigating our own course.

Of course, time spent examining the big picture could lead us to see that we are happy with the road we are on but that we would like more time with family or more free time to do whatever we want at the moment. Even if we want more extreme changes, the way to begin is to get off the road for long enough to catch our breath and remember who we are and what we truly want. Once we do that, we can take the wheel with confidence, driving the speed we want to go, in the direction that is right for us.

Happy Halloween

Halloween is a fun and exciting time for kids and adults! But for pets, it can be overwhelming! Keep your animals safe! All pets should be kept indoors to avoid being hit during the increased traffic on this busy night. As well, it is a good idea to confine your dogs and cats to a quiet room where they won't be scared by the noise, costumes and kids on candy highs! Remember, candy and chocolate are very harmful to your pets. Chocolate is toxic to dogs. If a dog eats chocolate, please call your vet clinic immediately. In high doses, chocolate can kill a dog. And for a small dog, it doesn't take very much chocolate to make them very sick.

If you want to give your pet a Halloween treat, please give them a dog or cat treat, not people food!
